Amsterdam, Netherlands - Co-Housing Communities:
Amsterdam embraces co-housing, where groups of individuals or families live together in a single property, sharing common spaces and responsibilities. This model promotes a sense of community, cost-sharing, and collaborative decision-making among residents. Learn more by clicking on image.

Berlin, Germany - Rent Control and Tenant Protections:
Berlin implemented measures to control rent prices and protect tenants from unjust eviction, aiming to maintain affordable housing options. The city's policies focus on ensuring that housing remains affordable, particularly for those with lower incomes. Learn more by clicking on image.

Copenhagen, Denmark - Sustainable Urban Planning:
Housing co-operatives are numerous in Denmark, providing residents with affordable places to live, keeping community spirit strong and cultivating "samfundssind" the Danish concept of putting society's needs ahead of individual interests.

Helsinki, Finland - Housing First Approach:
Helsinki adopts a "Housing First" strategy to address homelessness, providing individuals with stable housing as a primary step toward social integration. The focus is on securing permanent housing for individuals, coupled with wraparound support services to address underlying issues. Learn more by clicking on image.

Stockholm, Sweden - Tenant-Owned Housing Cooperatives:
Stockholm has a significant number of housing cooperatives where tenants collectively own and manage the properties. This model provides residents with a sense of ownership, stability, and a say in the decision-making process. Learn more by clicking on image.

Vienna, Austria - Social Housing Model:
Vienna has a long-standing tradition of social housing, where a significant percentage of the population lives in municipally owned or subsidized housing. The city prioritizes mixed-income developments, fostering social cohesion and preventing the concentration of poverty in specific areas. Learn more by clicking on image.